The New Terrorism: Fanaticism and the Arms of Mass ...

To begin with, fanaticism and terrorism are commonly associated with violence. The signs of fanaticism under dictatorship of Fidel Castro in Cuba and Kim Dzong Il in North Korea led both countries to political withdrawal from the international life and caused the death of thousands of those who had opposed the communist governments.

Is There a Difference Between Terrorism and Fanaticism ...

Abstract. This article aims to challenge the dominant view that the expressions of terrorism since the last decade of the twentieth century are fundamentally new. It questions the new aspects of terrorism, such as the transnational nature of the perpetrators and their organizations, their religious inspiration and fanaticism, their use of weapons of mass destruction, and their indiscriminate targeting.

How New Is the New Terrorism?: Studies in Conflict ...

More frequently, "new" terrorism has focused on a perceived new threat of mass casualties caused by chemical, biological or other agents. Discussions of "new terrorism" are often highly alarmist: it is described as "far more lethal than anything that has come before it," "a terrorism that seeks the total collapse of its opponents" (Dore Gold, the American Spectator, March/ April 2003).
